RANDOLPH

Death of Miss Clara Dame Occurred on Saturday.

The death of Miss Clara Dame occurred on Saturday afternoon at the home of her stepfather, Charles Taurton. For more than two years Miss Dame had been in ill health from a complication of troubles which finally resulted in Bright's disease. Clara Ellen Dame was born in Braintree July 1882. Twenty eight years ago she came to Randolph to live with her mother the latter having married Charles Taurton. In the years of Miss Dame's residence here she has made many warm friends. Deceased is survived by one sister, Mrs. Walter Howard, and three brothers, Herbert, whose home is in California, Frank living in Boston and Edgar of Randolph Center besides a step-father, Charles Taurton, and a step-sister, Mrs. Jerry Adams of Randolph Center. The funeral will be from her late home on Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, the Rev. Frazer Metzger officiating.

Would I Change My Work?

The thought comes to me sometimes—would I change my life-work, my choice of letters as a vocation, if I had my life to live again? Certainly I would not, for the literary life seems to afford a spacious and exhilarating field for the work of a man who wishes to think and grow. Moreover, literature to me has been, not a preference but a passion.

That I have been able to follow the choice of my heart places me among the fortunate few, for how many are forced, by the tyranny of circumstances into lines distasteful to their sentiments! And, no doubt, this misfit of environment and this misdirection of energy are the causes of much of the literary and imperfect work of the world. It seems an unflinching truth that the best work, like nest-building and honey-making, must be done in joy. Every one should be as free, at least, as the artist to select his career and to work out his ideal.

I began life as a shepherd boy, and even in those early years, I felt the lure of poetry. Many a time I stretched out on a rock, my sheep scattered about me on the hillside, and spent hours poring over Byron's "Childe Harold," and "The Rime of the Ancient Mariner," and to write them.

Since that hour of boyish vision, I have been a man-of-all-work—a cattle ranger, farmer, editor and teacher. But never once did I forget my boyish hope or waiver from its never once did any purpose flag or my interest falter. Into all these paths of life I went with my whole heart; and each task was good for me, for it broadened the horizon of experience—made me know life.

I would recommend to every young man to set his heart upon some wide, central purpose, and to cleave to it to the end. Yet, if he is forced into ungenial work, let him not sulk and sorrow, but be up and at it with conscientious care, knowing that the first duty of a man is to be mainly, and knowing, also, that some day he may need the equipment and attainment of this very experience, to fit him for the work of his heart's desire.—Edwin Markham, in "Success."

CAREFUL FRUIT GROWING.

The French Obtain Better Results Than the Americans.

"In this country," says a French visitor, "you just put things in the ground and let them grow more or less haphazard, as far as I can see. You have a soil so fertile that I suppose you can posting of his stock to the best houses. "The same care in lesser degree runs through all the French grower does. In certain places, but only in a few, the apicot is treated with all the care shown to the peach. It is less profitable to grow, for it does not keep well except by an expensive process of coating it with wax. The trees, however, are kept very carefully pruned, and the production of each is limited. "Growers can at once retard fruit and dwarf trees to such an extent that it is possible to purchase during the winter fruit actually growing on little trees small enough to be served, pot and all, on the table. Peaches thus grown (one on a tree only) cost about $20 a piece, other things in proportion, and the fruit is sold usually not to French people, but to visitors who think it smart to imitate what they consider the luxury of our gay capital. "All this care of detail may seem absurd to you who have a country so large and so lavishly productive as America. Still, I think it is an open question whether even here, where 'time is money' so much more than it is in Europe, the expenditure of care and thought on some neglected details might not lead to the financial profit of some growers."

Culinary Conceits.

Cold cereals can be fried the same as hash. Serve with gravy.

All lard to fry fritters and doughnuts must be sizzling hot before putting in the batter.

For garnishing fish use parsley, sliced beets, lemon, hard boiled eggs.

With fresh fish serve squash, green peas or parsnips, and with salt fish beets, carrots or turnips are considered best.

PEACH TREE TRAINED ON WALL

dispense with much that is necessary in our old country. But, all the same, I think the fruit might be benefited if you did some of the things that every French grower does. France is the country of detail, you know, and we think it pays in fruit growing just as it does in cooking.

"The fruits we pet and pamper most are the peach and the grape. The majority of peaches grown in this country would seem to a Frenchman to be distinctly of the second order—that is, in the language of his fruit culture, a peach of 'deux vent', or one grown on trees in an orchard. Between peaches grown thus, 'open to the wind', and those trained on trellises against walls the French make a sharp distinction.

"The trellis, or 'espalier', peaches are the only ones that appear on a carefully regulated table and are universally cultivated. They always command a much higher price than the tree peach, and at Montreuil the fruit has been brought to such perfection that they habitually sell for from 40 to 80 cents apiece.

"Even more elaborate is the procedure with fine table grapes. Hothouse grapes are not highly in favor among French epicures, for they are held to lack the rich flavor of the fruit grown in the open. At the same time grapes are so much in demand as a table delicacy that it is desirable that their season should be prolonged as far as possible into the winter. The difficulty of this situation has been met by a system which, complicated as it is, is quite generally in use.

"The grapes are grown on trellises exposed to the sun and six or seven bunches apart, like the peaches. When the clusters are ripe they are put with the stems and leaves in a sort of glass box or bottle, which is placed in a dark room. If the producer is growing for the market the bunches are looked at every day, for the slightest speck of imperfection will keep him from dispossession of his stock to the best houses. "The same care in lesser degree runs through all the French grower does. In certain places, but only in a few, the apicot is treated with all the care shown to the peach. It is less profitable to grow, for it does not keep well except by an expensive process of coating it with wax. The trees, however, are kept very carefully pruned, and the production of each is limited
